Benjamin, ex-King of Dahomey, died at Algiers on December 11. Benjamin was a determined foe to the French, and when, after a difficult campaign, he surrendered to Gen. Dods he was deposed and exiled to Martinique, whence he was transferred last year to Algeria. His death might have been one of the half-century, that all four of his wives obstinately threw away his medicines, thinking they were poison.

The late Dr. Laponi was not an old man. He was barely fifty-seven. He had been the Vatican doctor for eighteen years. He was called to fill that position in 1883 by Leo XIII on the recommendation of Prof. Fabi and Prof. Murri. He led a very active life, for the Pope's physician is apt to be very much in demand among the aristocratic adherents of the Vatican. His house was connected with the Pope's apartments in the Vatican by a telephone, and the day of Laponi's death it was used six times by his holiness to inquire after his friend and physician. The Pope has expressed his intention of appointing Dr. Marchisava, who is considered the best doctor in Rome, as his private physician in place of Dr. Laponi.

Baron von Bldt, Swedish minister, and Mr. Hellenes, advocate, have been appointed by the Swedish government members of The Hague peace tribunal for six years.

For the safety of the public, the London County Council has instituted a system at important centers, such as the Elephant and Castle, and Black Friars bridge, where the crowds are so dense at the evening hour, by which accidents are avoided to passengers on the different tramways in London. The people are made to go two together in a lot and are made to wait their turn to enter the cars. The last comes takes his place at the end of the line. The police supervise, but really their presence is not absolutely necessary, as the public willingly complies with a regulation so conducive to their comfort and safety. Women and children are in this way protected from being pushed and trampled on as is the case at the Brooklyn Bridge, for example.

At the annual meeting of the directors of the Krupp works, at Essen, on December 8, a dividend of 10 per cent was declared, which means that a sum of $4,000,000 will be handed to the newly-married daughter of late Herr Krupp as her income for a year.

Signor Marconi has become a spiritualist. His conversion is of quite recent date, and it has been brought about by the Princess d'Antoni del Drago, who besides being a convinced spiritualist is a remarkable medium as well. The princess lost her husband some months ago, since which time she has taken to spiritualism. Marconi attended a seance at her place in Rome, and he became so impressed at that meeting, he determined Club on Friday evening. The audience was further augmented by many appreciative outsiders. The dates of Miss Richards' other lectures before the same organization are: Friday, January 11, 1907; Thursday, February 7, and Monday, April 8, at 8 o'clock.

Miss Ruth Bryant is the guest of Miss Ames, in Annapolis, Md.

Judge and Mrs. Louis Barley were charmingly entertained the Senior Euchre Club on Friday evening, at their residence, on North Columbus street. The house was decorated in holly and mistletoe in honor of the Yuletide. The prizes were won by Mrs. William J. Boothe, Jr.; Mrs. William B. Daingerfield, Mr. George S. French, and Mr. C. C. Carlin. Judge and Mrs. Barley's guests were Mr. and Mrs. William J. Boothe, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. George S. French, Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Carlin, Mr. and Mrs. George Uhler, Mr. and Mrs. Carroll Ashby, Mr. and Mrs. Henry F. Robertson, Mrs. Daingerfield, Mrs. James Reid, and Miss Phil Wattles. Messrs. Harry Ugo, Eugene Taylor, W. W. Smith, and Douglas Stuart.

The Junior Bridge Club was entertained on Saturday afternoon by Misses Nannie and Bessie Jones at their residence on Prince street. Some of those present were Mrs. Louis S. Greene, Mrs. Gardner Boothe, Mrs. Louis S. Scott, Miss Lucy Brooks, Miss Lucy Douglas, Miss Hattie Edith Romney, Miss Mittle Herbert, Miss R. Courtney Marshall, Miss Grace Anderson, and Miss Frances Carr, of Newport News.

Two Meals Enough.

Boy Didn't Want Lunch, but Enjoyed It All the Same.

From the Chicago Record-Herald.

Two squabbling boys and girls in the poor districts of the city is a luxury all-sufficient. But the revelation came to a fourth-grade teacher in the Walsh School in a pathetic way.

Johnny wouldn't go home at noon. He wanted to stay in and draw Santa Claus on the blackboard.

"But you must go home and get some dinner, Johnny," the teacher urged.

"Oh, I don't want any dinner," he said, disdainfully.

"But yes; little boys must eat. Run away!" teacher protested.

"But I can't get in. The door's locked, and it's raining awful hard outside," objected the boy.

"But where's your mother? Didn't she leave the key? Isn't there something cold to eat?"

"Mamma's gone downtown. We don't have no dinner, me and brothers."

"But what do you do when it's cold and you can't get into the house?"

"Oh, we just jump around hard to keep ourselves warm. We just play till the bell rings."

"Johnny," teacher said presently, "Johnny, here! Run over to the store and get some bananas."

"But I don't want no bananas. I ain't hungry," the boy said boldly.

"But, Johnny, I want the bananas myself. I haven't very much lunch to-day."

Johnny was off like a lightning express, and when he came back the teacher had the repeat all spread out and ready.

He objected at first, but the teacher talked to him about his mother. She told him it would please her, so this quiet picnic lunch they had together.

She had touched Johnny's weak point. He wouldn't anything for his mother. So he ate for her sake, and while his eyes shone he told the teacher all the beautiful things about his beautiful mother, who worked so hard down town to feed and clothe him and brothers. Two good meals a day were good enough for him.

The animal was the famous red, short-horn steer which has lately been carrying everything before it at other shows.

The King also won several other first prizes with short-wooled sheep, best pen of three lambs, a pair of steers, and a heifer, and a pen of Southdown lambs.

These animals won on their merits and their being the property of King Edward has no weight with the judges, for, as a matter of fact, he lost as many prizes as he gained, but still he remained the leading winner in the exhibition in point of numbers of first prizes.

BROWN SUGAR AGAIN.

May Come Into Fashion Once More, Owing to Pure Food Law.

What will the housewife say, demands What to Eat, when she asks her grocer for his best sugar and is shown a scoop of the yellowish, brownish sweet such as her grandmother used to buy? You can almost hear her shriek of awe as she is told that this is the best sugar in the house. You can imagine her surprise when the grocer quotes the brown sugar to her at 6-1/2 cents a pound and the "old-fashioned" white sugar at 5 cents.

For brown sugar is now the proper thing. Whoever does not know this is ignorant of the rulings on the food law. The crystal-like sugar we have been eating is adulterated; all of this pretty white sugar, whether granulated, powdered, or in loaves, has been bleached by a chemical process, which the interpreters of the food law have seen fit to condemn.

It is learned that there is no such thing as pure white sugar; that sugar to be pure must be brown. The bleaching process consists in submitting the pure sugar to a treatment of mineral bluing. By this and other processes a great deal of the natural sweetness is extracted from the sugar, and it is further adulterated by the addition of insoluble substances, such as marble dust.

Confectioners have even made so bold as to advertise marble dust for the very purpose of adulteration, and it is regrettable to say there was a demand for well-repudiated adulteration and its expense and its danger. It is even claimed that sand is used in white sugar for the purpose of increasing its weight and bulk.

There is a foreign substance, called ultramarine, remaining in the process of manufacture, which is often added to white sugar to give it the requisite blue tinge. Whatever the result of the commission's permanent rulings, we have been taught that white sugar is impure, and brown sugar will come into style again.

OWL-PARTRIDGE STEW.

Wise Bird Tasted as Good as the Game One.

From the Otago Magnet.

One day an owl was shot and went into the pot to keep company with a couple of partridges. Pete demurred. "Owl eat," said he. "Not good man eat him."

"You can count me out on owl, too," Richards volunteered.

"Oh, they're all right," I assured them. "The Labrador people always eat them, and you'll find them very nice."

"Not me. Owl eat mice," Pete insisted.

"Well," I suggested, "possibly we'll be eating mice, too, before we get home, and it's a good way to begin by eating owl for then the mice won't seem so bad when we have to eat them."

Stanton took charge of the kettle and dished out the rations that night.

"Partridge is good enough for me," said Richards, fearing that Stanton might forget his prejudice against owl.

"No," Stanton replied. "Partridge is a piece of a young one you gave me for it wasn't as tough as they usually are."

"Maybe it was young, but that partridge was owl."

"It'll be darned," exclaimed Richards. "His face was as steady as a monument, and he laughed. 'If that was owl they're all right, and I'm a convert. I'll eat all I can get after this.'"

to study the subject scientifically. In Italy spiritualism has heretofore been looked on as a humbug, but lately some serious attention has been given to it by people of the highest standing.

The French chef of the royal household of England is M. Menager. He enjoys a salary of $9,000 a year, and he has free lodgings near Buckingham Palace, and he does not reach the palace until after 11 o'clock. He then receives from the master of the household the menus for the day, and at once sets to work upon them. He has a small army of cooks and assistants, all women, at his beck and call. Dinner is served at Buckingham Palace at 9 o'clock, and the servants and attendants are dressed in white, with dark blue swallow-tail coats, with dark blue gold-braided waistcoats, white satin breeches, and white silk stockings—a unique and remarkably handsome livery. After dinner, M. Menager presents his "delectable" for the day, which is prepared by the chef immediately, and the jovial chef (now in the prime of life) engages a hansom and rolls home to his comfortable quarters a supremely satisfied man.

Princess Henry of Battenberg, it is rumored, is to acquire a villa at San Sebastian, in Spain, near the royal villa of the King and Queen of Spain. The princess will then be able to spend at least the last part of her summers near her daughter.

More marvelous still than Prof. Korn's photography is an invention announced by a young French engineer of Nancy, M. Edouard Belin. The Munich professor is able to telegraph a photograph. M. Belin says he can photograph by telegraph. The photographs can be produced not only on paper, but on copper plates, which can be at once treated with acids and used for photogravure. M. Belin claims the secret of his invention, but it has been demonstrated by trials between Paris and Havre.

It is a strange irony of fate that republicanism has been chosen to be, in a special sense, the hotel of kings and queens in exile, and of those royal persons who prefer the climate of "le beau pays" to their own country. Sunny Cannes, on the Riviera, certainly deserves its name of "The playground of princes." All the more important villas are either owned or hired by members of the royal caste. At the head of the cosmopolitan gathering of royal personages is the still young-looking and brilliantly witty mother of a future queen and a future emperor, the dowager Empress of Austria, Mrs. Maria Theresa of Austria, who is splendid, if rather bohemian, state at the Villa Wenden, and it is whispered that the German Emperor, and even the kindly King of Denmark, would prefer to see the mother-in-law of their heirs apparent lead a more stately existence nearer her son's dominions in the duchy of Mecklenburg. The grand duchess is, however, the duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, who is a spoiled beauty from childhood upward, and since the rather tragic death of her elderly husband she has preferred smiling France to austere Schwerin. Her imperial highness is devoted to her many brothers, specially to the Grand Duke Michael, and she did everything in her power to promote the romantic marriage of the latter to the beautiful girl now known as the Countess of Tilly. From every point of view the Grand Duke Michael and his morganatic wife are the most popular royal personages at Cannes, and the Villa Kasbe, where they reside, is the most popular resort of the court, and there the host and hostess, in happy exile, delight to entertain their friends and neighbors from England.
